Assignment 9 - Brooke

Twas the night before the CompSci exam
And all through Perkins sat bunches of students trying to cram.
Reading quizzes, assignments, APT's galore,
It had been 48 hours since they had seen the outdoors.

Rubenstein was filled, not an empty table in sight,
Outside it was snowing, the weather quite blight.
Each student in pajamas with coffee in hand,
Wishing they could be somewhere else, such as Candyland.

Working through each assignment, one step at a time,
The debugging process took so long it was way past their bedtime.
With crossed fingers and closed eyes, each student ran an APT test,
Hoping that the first would be green and so would all the rest.

Hooray!! The first page was green, now time to scroll,
Green, green, green, RED. This is out of control.
Lecture notes, textbooks, and python tutor,
I needed these resources to understand my computer.

And then, in a sudden and big realization,
I remembered for loops, if statements, and list concatenation.
Combining them all to create a long line of code,
I hit submit one last time before I explode.

I sprang to my feet as the page was all green,
My code finally worked and I had become the CompSci queen.
As I ran out of Perkins, I yelled to all in sight,
HAPPY EXAM DAY TO ALL, AND TO ALL A GOOD NIGHT!